Wrong Target

Editor:

The Text Trail, a limited path indeed.

Thadeus Greenson's article "The Text Trail" (July 21) does not include some background details in the case and trial of former Humboldt County Sheriff's Department Sgt. Jason Daniels. The case was filed within only a few days of the deadline during the term of then District Attorney Paul Gallegos. It continued under the term of current DA Maggie Fleming. The physical DNA evidence had been revealed to be "touched" and therefore invalid under questioning by the defense during the trial. This was only after a winded explanation from the prosecution's expert witness.

The star witness was well known as non-credible within the law enforcement community. After over two years of preparation, this very witness appeared in court so completely inebriated that, not only could she not utter a single word while on the stand, but she was carried away on a gurney by paramedics after nodding out in court. To paraphrase Sgt. Daniel's defense attorney, "This case ended exactly as it should have," in acquittal.

The aftermath of this failed, nearly three-year-long case against Sgt. Daniels may have revealed some unsavory personal text messages. These messages, in whatever context, were potentially "racist," "sexist," "sexually crass," "homophobic," or whatever byword of the social justice narrative that seems to be pervasive in an ongoing national sensation that has now come to the attention of our small Redwood community.

However, good objective journalism would hopefully also observe the failings of the Humboldt County Superior Court: The unnecessary, costly and useless persecution, and termination, of an experienced and proven local law enforcement officer and negotiator. It would be nice to see some investigation into who brought this case about and why, with such a lack of solid evidence, or even a credible witness.

Kind of a Big Deal

Editor:

Small win? Oh, heck no. ("A Small Win for Transparency," July 28.)

It's a very big deal when citizens and the Constitution are once again recognized as possessing inalienable rights. Thanks for such a clear, precise article.

I am thrilled that a court has ruled that, yes, public records mean just that.

The cops and city were so obviously full of crap when they started all this secretive nonsense. Blatantly, the plan was to just delay, delay, delay, delay in hopes their transgressions would somehow disappear.

Sadly for them, there are a lot of us with very good memories.

I subscribe to the philosophy that if one has nothing to hide and has done nothing wrong, well then, release the documents and videos.

What are they hiding that is so horrendous? Boggles the mind.

Gura Lashlee,
McKinleyville

Editor:

Regarding "A Small Win for Transparency" and your comments that the NCJ feels like it was a "bit of a waste" despite being happy and relieved that what you went through has finally come to fruition because the courts have ordered this video to be released; but why did it take so long to happen?

It took so long because of who and what you're dealing with: law enforcement and those in management with the city of Eureka. I've seen time and time again where persons of authority (read: management), or those who hold a position with varying degrees of power, decide whether or not to play by the rules or ignore them. Their attitude regarding whatever the situation might entail always seems to be that they'll do as they please, law or truth be damned!

To the employees of the NCJ, your wait was not in vain and I hope mine isn't either, for I am dealing with the same thing. I filed charges against a previous employer with a federal entity in the summer of 2015 and resolution is still a ways off. I'm not alone, though, as others who file complaints with this same organization will tell you the same thing. Of course, we have only the politicians in Washington to thank for why we wait so long for our cases to be heard, for they could have added more employees to handle the increased workload but didn't consider it worthwhile.

There is good news to my situation. Shortly after being informed that charges had been filed, the individual in charge left suddenly to everyone's surprise last summer and the dipstick who oversaw the personnel department left this past June!

I want to take this moment to congratulate your organization on the victory of forcing the release of the police video, and finessing it into case law. Feds Probe Plane Crash

Life Flight wreck leaves no survivors

By Kimberly Wear

kim@northcoastjournal.com

A federal investigation is underway to determine what caused a medical transport plane bound for the Bay Area to crash just north of McKinleyville in the early morning hours on July 29, killing all four — including a patient — on board.

Cal-Ore Life Flight identified the crew as pilot Larry Mills, flight nurse Deborah Kroon, and flight paramedic Michelle Tarwater. All of the victims, including 35-year-old patient April Rodriguez, were from Crescent City, according to the Humboldt County Sheriff's Office.

"This is one of the saddest moments in our history. First and foremost, our thoughts and prayers are with the families of the patient and our crewmembers." REACH Air Medical Service President Sean Russell said in a statement.

What appeared to be the engine and propeller of a downed Cal-Ore Life Flight Plane lie on a service road on Green Diamond Property north of McKinleyville. According to a press release, the pilot reported smoke in the cockpit and was attempting to return to Crescent City when radio communication was lost and the plane lost radar contact. Photo by Mark McKenna

The twin-engine Piper PA31 was traveling to Oakland when it went off radar 5 miles north of Arcata, shortly after Mills reported smoke in the cockpit at 1 a.m. and indicated he was returning to Crescent City.

National Transportation Safety Board investigators completed field work at the crash scene — a remote stretch of timberland owned by Green Diamond — over the weekend. The aircraft has been moved to Sacramento for a wreckage layout examination, according to NTSB Chief of Media Relations Christopher O'Neil.

A preliminary report by the agency, charged with investigating civil air crashes, is expected to be released in the next two weeks.

A Green Diamond employee found pieces of the plane along a logging road around 9 a.m. July 29, directing search and rescue team members to the area where the four victims were located inside the fuselage, Undersheriff William Honsal said.

"Part of the debris was on fire or was smoldering, so we had Cal Fire and Arcata Fire called to assist," he said. "We then notified the FAA and NTSB. Once it was determined that there were no survivors, the NTSB and FAA gave us the authority to extricate the bodies from the plane."

The crash left a quarter mile debris field. Honsal said the sheriff's office received word of the missing plane soon after it lost radio contact and dispatched patrol deputies to its last known coordinates, near Crannell. The sheriff's office also put out calls to regional airports to see if the plane had landed.

At daybreak, with no signs of the aircraft, a sheriff's office search and rescue team set out with assistance from Civil Air Patrol, the California Highway Patrol, Cal Fire, the Coast Guard and Green Diamond personnel.

"We are all really heartbroken because we are all dependent on the Life Flight personnel because we live in such an isolated place," Honsal said, noting the crews have transported numerous accident victims as well as sheriff's office staff, their family and friends.

"This hit too close to home for a lot of us," he said.

The medical transport company, which merged with REACH Air Medical Services in 2011, serves the rural areas of California and Oregon. According to the company's website, Cal-Ore has responded to more than 50,000 emergency calls for ground and air ambulance service since it began in 1998.

National Weather Service Science and Operations Officer Mel Nordquist said conditions at the Arcata-Eureka Airport around the time of the crash were misty with light winds and overcast clouds at 200 feet.

A memorial service was set for Aug. 3, with a procession from Crescent City to Brookings, Oregon, where the Cal-Ore office is based.

An experienced pilot with more than 20 years of flying experience, Mills was remembered by the company as a devoted father and husband with a ready smile and gentle nature. Mills, a volunteer first responder for 12 years, was 54.

Kroon, a 49-year-old flight nurse who had been with Cal-Ore since 2014, was a New Zealand native who made her home on the North Coast after spending 25 years as a critical care nurse in hospitals across the United States, according to the company statement. She was recalled as a "free spirit" who cherished her dog Oscar and her horses.

One of the first in the region to obtain certification from the National Registry of Emergency Medical Technicians-Paramedic, the 30-year-old Tarwater was described as a natural caregiver with a penchant for gardening. She had been with Cal-Ore since 2011.

"We all have the same questions, but until we have factual reports from the NTSB, there is nothing more we can share," Russell said in the statement.

Appetite, Nausea, & Medical Cannabis

Many individuals, familiar or unfamiliar with cannabis, have heard the slang word munchies associated with cannabis use and appetite stimulation. The munchie effect can send many patients to their cupboard or refrigerator, ravishing their favorite foods, even to their detriment. The appetite stimulating effect can be attributed to the chemical THC, and in particular the activated state of Delta-9 THC and 11-Hydroxy THC. These chemicals interact with CB1 receptors in the human brain, resulting in appetite modulation.

In 1985 The FDA approved the drug Marinol® with the active ingredient Dronabinol, to be prescribed by doctors for the treatment of nausea, vomiting, and appetite stimulation. Dronabinol is a synthetically derived cannabinoid, just like THC found naturally in the cannabis plant. Marinol has been helpful to many patients over the last 30 years, just as the many medical cannabis products provided by HPRC.

Our medical cannabis collective has assisted many patients undergoing the treatment of cancer or suffering from the symptoms of AIDS. The side effects of many cancer treatments includes nausea, vomiting, and decreased appetite. Using low dose THC medicine delivered through sublingual tinctures has been extremely beneficial to patients both new and experienced with cannabis. Smoking or vaporizing cannabis has also stopped acute episodes of nausea and vomiting for many patients. By controlling and being conscious of cannabis doses, many of our patients are able to benefit from the anti-emetic and appetite-stimulating properties of cannabis without being overwhelmed with high amounts of psychoactivity associated with high-dose cannabis use. Each patient has a unique experience with THC, so ensuring you know the dose of your cannabis product is always suggested.

New research, lab testing, and specific genetic breeding have also identified the medical uses of a less known cannabinoid called THCv. THCv is an antagonist of the CB1 and CB2 receptors in the human body, creating appetite suppression in many patients! Some strains that our dispensary has provided in the past that test high in THCv include Durban Poison and Jack the Ripper. THCv has also been beneficial for patients suffering from convulsions and seizures, making it a very intriguing cannabinoid.

At HPRC we have worked with many medical cannabis patients over the past 17 years. We are dedicated to our patients, employees, and community, and are always trying to further legitimize medical cannabis. We have seen many patients use medical cannabis as a successful tool to their well being and would love to share more information with our community. Always talk with your doctor before making changes to your medicine. Feel free to stop by our clean and convenient location to explore new products and ask questions to our knowledgeable staff members! 📍

The information presented in this article is not to be considered medical advice and is for informational purposes only. Always work with your primary caregiver when making decisions about medicine use.

NOMRL

Cannabis reducto ad absurdum

By Linda Stansberry
linda@northcoastjournal.com

Damn, but we love our views. We love them so much that, back in 2011, some of us successfully levied this love into stopping the big baddies at Shell Energy from installing wind turbines on Bear River Ridge, just south of Ferndale. “Unsightly!” was the argument. OK, well, there were other arguments, like the prospect of large equipment trucks barreling down the Wildcat and the well-documented negative impact of wind farms on bird species. But the loudest shouts came from those who didn’t want Ferndale’s postcard-ready face pockmarked by progress, even if that progress represented a step toward alternative energy. NOMRL: “Not On My Ridgeline!” The rallying cry for we rural NIMBYs who are lucky enough to have the wilderness as our backyards.

Now, faced with the uncertainty of legalization and the very real influx of mega-growers leveling hillsides, draining streams, out-watting the stars with mixed-light grows and generally ruining our views with giant greenhouses, we are crowding out community meeting halls and Board of Supervisors meetings, waving the banner of NOMRL once again. Given that we live in the most beautiful place in the world, it’s not a bad argument. It’s actually an argument I’ve used before in this column. But it’s not the right argument.

Commercial agriculture is not coming to our backyards. It is here. It has been here. And chances are that you and I have already profited from it, actively or passively. We have profited from it as growers, as trimmers, as soil salesmen, as restaurant owners, as writers for an alt-weekly that regularly advertises clones and glassware. We have profited from it from the sanctity of our rural hideaways, trying to drown out the surround sound of generators with our own nervous humming. We have largely looked the other way as our neighbors and family members — it didn’t start with the “not from around these here parts” folks, thank you very much — tore apart the hills, pumped the creeks and lit up the night sky. Maybe you didn’t see it from your back porch, but it was staring you in the face all the same.

So now we’re looking at a very strange vision of the future in which some of those ginormous greenhouses will get the nod from the Planning Commission and law enforcement, should they meet all of the various restrictions on land use and accessibility. And yet more ginormous greenhouses are being built every day. Some of them will be back in the hills where they’ve always been. Some may appear on the picture-postcard hills above Ferndale, forcing tourists to tip the lenses of their smartphone cameras a little lower. Who knows?

There are some great arguments against the large-scale commercialization of marijuana in rural Humboldt County: Habitat fragmentation. Light pollution. Noise pollution. Crumbling infrastructure. The admittedly-dubious ability of county government to deal with all of the above. If you really have a problem with greenhouses ruining your view, start there. It’s OK to be sad and uncomfortable with the rate at which things are changing and with the realization that your slice of rural utopia is becoming (more) smelly, noisy and dangerous. But don’t make it the cornerstone of your argument. With (possibly) the exception of the Ferndale wind turbine battle, history does not give a shit about your view. ●

Korean War Vets, Coasties Remember the Fallen

The U.S. Coast Guard cutter Dorado eased off Woodley Island Marina's outermost dock on the morning of July 27 with valuable cargo aboard and a solemn task to perform.

It was the 63rd anniversary of the "end" of the Korean War — a war that reached a United Nations armistice on July 27, 1953 but, in truth, has still not ended.

Wednesday morning, five surviving Korean War veterans, all in their 80s, came aboard the Dorado for a quiet annual ceremony, laying a wreath between the jaws of the Eureka Jetty to remember 24 Humboldt sailors, soldiers and airmen who didn't make it back from that war. For the United States, the Korean "Conflict" lasted from 1950 into 1953, but for these men and for thousands more, the battles continue.

"I still remember them," said 83-year-old Warren Longnickel, of Carlotta, who, after 20 years in, left the service as a master sergeant. He read the names of the 24 Humboldters who died there, as a Coast Guard sailor rang the bell after each name.

Bill Odonnell, whose father — another Bill and a Korean War vet who died last year — helped organize the ceremony with the Coast Guard.

"Let us not forget that they went to war not for conquest and not for gain, but only to protect the innocent," Odonnell said. "They suffered greatly in 1,000 forgotten battles. They added luster to the codes we hold most dear — duty, honor and country."

The Dorado steamed down from its berth in Crescent City for the ceremony because Humboldt's cutter, the Barracuda, is down for maintenance.

"It was an honor to have these men aboard," Dorado skipper Lt. Andrew Russo said. "These people fought for freedom, so it's nice to give back and honor them for all their sacrifices," he said. "With everything going on today — all the terror attacks — it's a reminder that we can overcome."

U.S. military estimates show nearly 37,000 people — Americans, allies and Koreans — were killed during the three years of U.S. involvement in the war in the early 1950s; 103,284 were U.S. troops wounded in action. But other estimates place the casualties much higher — 1.2 million Korean and Chinese military, and 1.6 million civilians.

The Dorado steamed slowly out of Humboldt Bay to the mouth of the Jetty. There, Don Biasca threw a wreath overboard, and it drifted out to sea on the tide.

The Coasties, vets and observers offered a prayer for the fallen, as fishermen nearby trolled for salmon.

"We remember these men not with fear, but with love," Odonnell said.

The fog started to lift as Dorado turned and headed back to shore.

The Death of Jeannie Newstrom

Was it elder abuse, neglect or a failure of the system?

By Linda Stansberry

Information graphic by Jonathan Webster

Before you read the details of Jeannie Newstrom's death or the painful, gruesome and — if the allegations are to be believed — entirely preventable indignities that led up to it, there are some things you should know about her life.

"She was a great cook," says her son Sherman Newstrom. "She made jams and jellies, tuna fish stuff. She canned her own everything. I wish I had gotten her recipes."

Newstrom was born Jeannie Sefried on Sept. 11, 1929. She moved from North Dakota to Arcata just after World War II, becoming a teenage bride to Sherman Newstrom Sr. in 1947. They had three children together: Sherman, Steven and Sharon. Along with working as a butcher and meat cutter in local grocery stores, she was a gardener, cook and grandmother.

"She was very crafty," says Sharon Newstrom Crossland, her daughter. "It skipped a generation with me. And she loved to dance, all kinds of dancing."

Newstrom died in hospice care at the age of 83. According to the California Department of Justice, she spent the last few weeks of her life in constant pain, swaddled in soiled adult diapers, her skin sloughing from her bones, a gangrenous toe infecting her blood. It was not a fate that hardworking Jeannie Newstrom, who was suffering dementia, or her adult children, who thought she was in good hands, could ever have anticipated.

Good narrative demands a crime story with a beautiful victim, an obvious villain and the mechanisms in place for swift justice. But in real life, cases like Jeannie Newstrom's are the rule rather than the exception. Unable to speak, unable to move, long departed from reality and expected to die at any time, Newstrom fell through every crack there is in the system we have set up to protect society's most vulnerable citizens. Her fractured family was unable to care for her or supervise her care. The care home where she spent her final years suffered an unanticipated disruption, and its clients allegedly suffered the consequences. The agency responsible for making sure the care home was doing its job didn't catch the horrific neglect that allegedly led up to her death. Apparently, neither did the public guardian assigned to do what her family could not. And the parties allegedly responsible for her neglect are still awaiting trial three years later.

Crossland says that although dementia softened her a lot, her mother was not an angel: The siblings had tough childhoods, difficult relationships with their mother and with one another.

"I don't want people to think of her as a victim," Crossland says. "But nobody on this earth deserves to be treated that way. Nobody should have to go through that."

"My mom told me that I'd better not put her in a nursing home or she'd haunt me," Crossland continues. "And, by God, she was ornery enough to do it."

But Crossland, who was also caring for her invalid husband, became overwhelmed. Jeannie Newstrom began exhibiting early symptoms of dementia in the mid-1990s, and was being cared for by her boyfriend, Harold Dockter, until his death in 2008. Crossland did bring her mother into the home for a while, but a rift between the siblings led to their mother being put under public guardianship, and then into skilled care. There are some inconsistencies between stories about how involved the family was with Jeannie Newstrom's care; unfortunately, the Public Guardian's Office cannot comment on their wards, even to confirm whether or not Newstrom was under conservatorship. What we do know is that, according to court documents, Crossland and her brothers had a protracted battle over who would care for their mother in 2009, with both sides alleging elder abuse, and that on Nov. 20, 2009, Newstrom went under conservatorship, her assets and fate becoming the responsibility of the county of Humboldt. In June of 2010, Newstrom entered Nina's Care Home, a small, six-bed residential care facility in Cutten.

Crossland and her brother say their mother seemed happy at Nina's. Sherman Newstrom said it seemed clean and that his mom "always put on a smile for him." Jeannie Newstrom was largely in good spirits, besides periodically asking where her beloved Harold was, only to be reminded that he had passed away.

There were a few things that were off, things that Crossland either couldn't quite put her finger on or wasn't savvy enough to know were problems.

"You couldn't get around to see how clean it was," Crossland says of Nina's. "There would be a smell in there. After I got her in there, they took her underwear away from her and put on a diaper and told her to go in that."

Sherman Newstrom says he was pretty

"hands off" about his mother's care, visiting her periodically but leaving major decisions to his sister. A care provider himself, there were a few things he thought were odd, but he put it down to a difference in practices.

"They wouldn't let us stay in the room when they were changing her," he says. "I thought that was weird, but everybody has their rules."

There might have been a practical reason Nina's staff didn't let Newstrom's family get a good look at her. Crossland says that her mother — once a large woman — rapidly lost weight after going into care and that the food was "just crap." Crossland says staff refused to tell her what they were feeding her mother or keep her informed about her care. A medical report for Newstrom dated May 18, 2011, lists her existing health problems as Alzheimers, hypothyroidism, rheumatoid arthritis and anemia. She is described as incontinent and disoriented. At the top of the page is a note: "Call [care home] before you visit. Patient is conserved, speak to public guardian with concerns, not patient's daughter." Newstrom's doctor Hal Grotke declined to comment for this story, but on the date of this exam he gave her less than six months to live. From Crossland's perspective, her mother seemed to be OK, and the cost of her stay, around $4,000 a month, was what the estate could afford. Her weight was declining, but Crossland put some of this down to age. Jeannie Newstrom would surpass the doctor's expectations by a year and a half. But by the time she left Nina's in 2013, according to Crossland, she looked "like a cancer patient, like a carcass."

In its annual inspection reports conducted between 2009 and 2012, the California Department of Social Services' Community Care Licensing Division reported few problems with Nina's. In 2009, it reported that residents said they were "happy with the services." Subsequent reports were uneventful. The first hints that something was amiss came in April of 2012, when an investigation found that a resident had been hospitalized multiple times for bedsores. Also known as pressure sores or dermal ulcers, bedsores are a persistent health problem in elder care facilities. If patients cannot adjust themselves in bed or in their chairs to relieve pressure, staff must readjust them, usually every two hours, to prevent sores from forming. Untreated bedsores can become infected and cause deep wounds. The investigation uncovered that a physician's report with a plan of care was also missing from the patient's file. As is standard, the facility stated that it would correct these deficiencies.

On July 26, 2012, Community Care Licensing visited again, this time to investigate allegations that staff at Nina's did not call 911 in a timely manner prior to a resident's death. Although the details on the report are sparse, it appears a resident suffered a medical emergency and staff called the next-of-kin rather than medical personnel. This is not in line with state recommended guidelines for this type of care. In response, the administrator agreed to hold a staff training.

The repercussions to Nina's for the incidents in April and July of 2012 may seem insufficient; in fact they are standard. A complaint will be made by a family member, guardian or whistleblower. The state will come investigate (it also conducts yearly audits). Sometimes there will be proof of misdeeds — doctor's reports, photographs — but investigators often rely on the administrator of a facility to provide documentation that proves or disproves an allegation. When investigating complaints, a CCL licensing agent might speak to family members, staff, residents, law enforcement, social workers or doctors. In some cases, a care facility may be asked to pay a fine.

The Journal found that, based on information compiled from the California Department of Social Services' website, there is a stark difference between how many allegations are investigated for residential care facilities in Humboldt County and how many actually result in citations. California has 33 counties with 20 or more residential care facilities that have operated in the last 5 years. Of those, Humboldt had the second highest rate of allegations per facility filed with the department over the last five years, and the sixth highest rate of allegations that were eventually substantiated through an investigation. But, during the same period, Humboldt County ranked 32nd in that group for rate of citations issued. Of the meager number of citations issued, most are punitive "type A" citations, meaning there is "immediate risk to the health, safety or personal rights" of residents, indicating that when allegations are substantiated here, they tend to be serious. In fact, there have been 2.5 times more serious "type A" citations than preventative "type B" citations issued in Humboldt County over the last five years, the largest disparity in any of the 33 counties.

The California Department of Social Services was unable to comment on this data at the time the Journal went to press.

Community Care Licensing, which inspects not only residential care but adoptive and foster homes, adult day care and other facilities, is essentially a “toothless” organization, according to Suzi Fregeau, manager of the long-term care ombudsman program at the Area 1 Agency on Aging. As an example, Fregeau cites another residential care facility in Eureka, Chamberlain’s Care Home, which CCL visited 20 times between January and May 2014 to investigate allegations that its owner, Gina Chamberlain, had locked one client in a bedroom and stolen hydrocodone, money, a Rolex watch and a car from two others.

Fregeau says she became frustrated with the pace of CCL’s investigation. Complaints about theft were filed as far back as August of 2013, she alleges. She provided CCL with pictures of the allegedly stolen car, which she said she witnessed Chamberlain driving.

“They did nothing,” she says. Chamberlain’s continued to take in new patients. A report filed by CCL on April 9 confirmed all of the allegations, but the facility was not shut down until May 5, 2014. “Somewhere along the line, someone should have said something,” Fregeau says. “I personally hold them responsible for a minimum of August on.”

Michael Weston, deputy director of public affairs and outreach programs with the California Department of Social Services, disputes this interpretation of events.

“If you look at the data, half of the visits made [to Humboldt County in 2014] were coming in to that facility. That’s the department elevating and escalating oversight of the facility,” he said. “When you do a license revocation, the burden of proof is on the department.”

If investigating allegations into a facility takes a long time, bringing bad actors to justice can take even longer. The Chamberlain case did not see its day in court until March 2016, when Gina Chamberlain was convicted of her crimes. But Chamberlain, who failed to appear at a July administrative hearing, has not yet had her license formally revoked (it is currently suspended). In an email, Weston said the state is moving forward with this legal action, which will also mean a “lifetime exclusion from any facility licensed by the Department.” It is unclear when this will be completed.

In the case of Jeannie Newstrom, Weston stresses that Community Care Licensing agents aren’t doctors.

“[Licensing Program Analysts], when they’re in a facility, they’re not there to assess a resident, not there to do medical evaluations,” says Weston. “They’re not medical professionals. They’re there to ensure there is care and supervision of residents.”

The turning point for Nina’s Care Home came on May 1, 2013, when its owner, Nina Winogradov, was struck and killed by a vehicle while walking her dog. Winogradov, the long-time partner of local television personality and newspaper columnist Dave Silverbrand, opened the care home in 1989. Upon her death, the estate passed to her children, who decided to shut the facility down. It was placed under the administrative care of Winogradov’s friend, Mia Hyongcha Bressler. The estate also hired a local registered nurse, William Clawson, to assist in transferring the patients to a new facility.

Clawson has an obscure role in the local health care industry. His company, Quest for Excellence, bills itself as offering “personal and professional advancement productions.” The language on Quest for Excellence’s website is an exercise in opacity. Its parent company, Wm Clawson Enterprises, Inc., is a “California religious non-profit corporation.”

Quest for Excellence is “dedicated to the development, production, support, and continuous improvement of services and products which serve to promote personal, spiritual and professional excellence,” according to its website. After examining the services advertised, this appears to translate to providing continuing education for health care providers such as those in elder care or nursing. Many professionals must complete a certain number of continuing education credits per year to retain their licenses. Quest for Excellence is one of only three agencies on the North Coast authorized by the state to provide such classes. Among its offerings are seminars on adult residential facility certification ($525), sexual harassment prevention ($45) and a Mexican Riviera Cruise Continuum of Care Conference (price upon request).

In his biography on the organization’s website, Clawson’s name is trailed by a long list of credentials: PhD, BSN, DipN, RN, PHN, CLNC. The DipN (Diploma in Nursing), RN (Registered Nurse) and BSN (Bachelor’s of Science in Nursing) are pretty straightforward. The CLNC (Certified Legal Nurse Consultant) allows Clawson to offer consultation to attorneys on medical issues. Clawson touts his graduation from the “prestigious” Vickie Milazzo Institute, but according to a consumer complaints board, the Milazzo Institute’s certification is largely decorative, unnecessary to become a CLNC. Ironically, CLNCs are often called to testify in courts as experts. Clawson does not say where he got his PhD; it’s in Religious Studies, obtained from the Universal Life Church of Modesto in February 1996, a month after he became an ordained minister there.

It is unclear how much Newstrom had already deteriorated prior to coming under the care of Clawson in May of 2013. Fregeau alleges that Community Care Licensing had noted issues with bedsores; she may in fact be the patient mentioned in its April 2012 report. It is also unclear how much oversight the facility’s administrator, Winogradov, had over the care home prior to her death. She did not sign the reports from Community Care Licensing in 2012 and 2013; Bressler, who according to Fregeau, was not qualified to be an administrator, did. The Journal reached out to the attorneys for both Clawson (Marion Miller) and Bressler (Neil Sanders), but they did not return our calls. We were also unable to reach Silverbrand or Winogradov’s children. Bressler was the principal caretaker at the facility after Winogradov’s death, and was responsible for feeding, bathing and oversight of the patients. But Clawson, with his long list of qualifications, was responsible for assessing the five remaining patients and making sure they transitioned smoothly into other facilities.

Representatives from Community Care Licensing visited the facility on May 9 and 21. On May 11, 2013, Clawson signed off on the paperwork saying that Newstrom was fit to transfer.

The allegations against Clawson, which are based on interviews conducted by Community Care Licensing and detailed in a 10-page accusation by the Board of Nursing calling for the revocation of his license, include “gross negligence” and “incompetence.” According to the report, Clawson did not physically handle Newstrom, but stood by while Bressler did the examination. He also declined to examine Newstrom in the 13 days that followed. The Board of Nursing said he “took the position that it was not his job to check on any patients after the initial assessment.”

Crossland, who stopped by the home periodically during this time to check on her mother and observed she was looking gaunt, has a low opinion of Clawson.

“He barefaced lied to me, right to my face,” she says. “I had to go there and I asked him, point blank, if she was OK to be moved. He said she would be fine.”

Crossland was also troubled that her mother was wrapped in clothing from head to toe, with long pants and a sweater. But it didn’t occur to her that someone might be trying to cover something up. Newstrom had lost most of her ability to speak by then. She was uncomfortable, only able to move a little bit in the bed.

Newstrom had been taken to a podiatrist a couple of weeks earlier, on April 29, and diagnosed with gangrene. Her feet were wrapped from her ankle to her toes with instructions that the dressings be changed every day. According to the accusations, the dressings had not been changed when Clawson examined her; they were not changed for almost a month. The Community Care Licensing agents apparently did not notice the smell of rotting flesh during their May 9 visit, but their report says they met with Bressler to “document the status of the remaining residents in care.” There were then five residents at the house.

According to the report from CCL’s May 9 visit, agents met with Bressler and spoke over the phone with Winogradov’s son to confirm the closure plan for the facility. Physically checking as to whether Newstrom was fit to be transferred was outside the scope of their duties, Weston says.

“It is the responsibility of the care providers to make those determination if the needs of the resident exceeds the care of the facility,” says Weston.

“CCL generally requests that a doctor perform the resident evaluations,” reads the accusation, “... But if a facility cannot obtain an appraisal from a doctor, CCL will send their own RN consultant to assess the residents. ... Given that Respondent, an RN, had performed the patient assessments, CCL accepted them.”

According to the Board of Nursing’s accusations, during the May 11 examination, Bressler noted that Newstrom was emaciated and had a rash on her rear end. Her groin and peri-rectal area were also inflamed. The accusation says Newstrom’s public guardian was not notified. Clawson asked Bressler to sign off on the assessment but she refused. In the intervening days, the Board of Nursing says that Bressler told Clawson that Newstrom had skin tears on her arm and behind her knee, but he did not check on her, despite visiting the facility between six and nine times.

On May 23, staff from Frye’s Care Home arrived to help transfer Newstrom to her new facility. Crossland, who was also there, suggested that they dress her mother in jeans, but Bressler responded, “No, she’s all glued up.” What that meant would become apparent once she arrived at Frye’s.

According to the Board of Nursing’s report, the smell of urine and feces followed Newstrom, who “yelled out in pain,” during the move. Once at Frye’s, the staff prepared her for a shower and body check. As Newstrom yelled “Oh Lord, help me,” and “Ow, it hurts,” they carefully removed her clothes. The report states that Newstrom was covered in bedsores, 12 in all, from her chest down to her toes. Some of her clothes and gauze were stuck to the wounds, and the staff had to use sterile water to loosen and remove them. An open wound “at least four inches in length,” had formed behind one knee, so deep that staff saw the tendons of her leg. Newstrom’s gangrenous toe was now black, according to the report. She was wearing multiple diapers and, under those, four pads soaked in feces and urine. Feces coated her lower torso, dried to her skin. The staff called 911. Hardworking Jeannie Newstrom, who loved to dance, went to the hospital.

She died in hospice care 16 days later, on June 8, 2013.

Now dead for more than three years, Jeannie Newstrom continues to fall through the cracks. In 2013, the district attorney, Paul Gallegos, declined to press charges against Clawson or Bressler. His successor, Maggie Fleming, did not know why. Community Care Licensing sent its report to the Board of Nursing, where it languished until 2015. The California State Attorney General is now prosecuting the criminal case, but the trial has been delayed three times already and is now scheduled for later this month. Clawson, who is charged with one count of elder abuse, is still a registered nurse. He is still an associate member of the North Coast Association of Residential Care Administrators. He is still charging for courses on how to care for the elderly. His alleged crime is punishable a maximum of four years in state prison. Bressler faces additional allegations that she caused great bodily harm, which may add another 12 years if she’s convicted.

Joyia Emard, public information officer with the California Board of Nursing, could not speak as to why Clawson and Bressler were not charged with elder abuse back in 2013. The Board of Nursing does not have jurisdiction over criminal charges, but it can revoke Clawson’s license after a proper hearing.

“The investigations can take quite a while,” Emard says. “They need all kinds of documentation: autopsy reports, interviews. There’s a lot involved to this whole investigative process, especially if people aren’t being cooperative.”

She adds that it’s not unusual for cases to take a long time if licensees have hired a lawyer; Clawson has. And these cases are a rather low priority for an overburdened court system.

Fregeau’s diagnosis is succinct.

“The system failed Mrs. Newstrom,” she says. She adds that Clawson called her on May 24, 2013, to file an elder abuse report, ostensibly against Bressler. By then, Fregeau had already heard the facts and, optimistically, perhaps, thought justice would be forthcoming. ●

Stuffed

Japanese dumplings by the dozens

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill
jennifer@northcoastjournal.com

An order of gyoza at a Japanese restaurant is almost never bad — a row of six pan-fried dumplings, translucent skins browned and crisped, the pork filling spiked with garlic, ginger and scallions. You dip one into the tart sauce and bite daintily or scarf the whole thing, huffing a little around the steamy mouthful if you couldn't wait for it to cool. And if you're not eating alone, when you open your eyes again the pretty rectangular serving plate will be empty but for the gloss of oil where they sat.

You could blame your greedy table-mates, but should your loyalty even be tested this way? The appetizer-only gyoza system sets us up to turn on one another, to face the isolation of hun-king steam-faced over our meals, elbows set to block interloping chopsticks. And worst of all, you may never know the luxury of actually eating your fill of dumplings.

At home, nobody makes six dumplings. When I was a child, my grandmother, my mother and I sat around our creaking kitchen table and stuffed dozens upon dozens of gyoza for dinner, not appetizers. Those broads were fast, too. Occasionally crooking an eyebrow at my fumbling, they quickly spooned the meat from a glass bowl and sealed eerily uniform pouches that spoke volumes about their experience and near-diagnosable perfectionism. We lined them up like platoons on plates and cookie sheets. Over the years my recruits stood more at attention. We fried them in shifts, filling a large bowl into which my family's chopsticks descended, emptying the bowl a few seconds before my grandmother — always on last frying duty — filled it again with a hot batch.

My brother and I ate with abandon and a little competition, cheeks bulging, the dumplings snatched from the bowl and only tapping our plates before landing in our mouths. When we leaned back at last in our chairs, stuffed and panting, she slid the extra batches — always extra batches — into containers for later.

Unlike Italian, you can't eat Japanese family-style except, well, at home with a family. The good news is that building your own army of gyoza is a learnable skill. This is my grandmother's recipe, converted into measurements from the traditional eyeballing and sniffing, sampling and kibitzing.

Did you just wonder if you could use ground turkey? Put this down and go think on your sins. Gyoza require pork, fatty ground pork that's blushing pink — not the lean stuff, which will yield dry, flavorless dumplings. However, not even my grandmother would look askance at you for using packaged dumpling wrappers; we always did. While this is a nice shortcut, be sure to give yourself plenty of time to make the filling and stuff the dumplings — at least 90 minutes the first time out.

A bulk of the mix is Napa cabbage. To keep it from making your dumplings watery, wash the leaves, pat them dry with a cotton or paper towel and sprinkle them with salt. After 10 or 15 minutes, give them a couple of good squeezes and let the excess water drip out. Then use a sharp knife to chop the leaves into a fine haystack, then chop it again crosswise until it's like tiny confetti and my mother nods at you in silent approval. (Kidding! This will never happen.)

Once the filling is mixed, you can always fry a spoonful in a pan to see if you want to adjust the seasoning. If it's your first time stuffing dumplings, a plastic press like the ones sold in Asian markets isn't a bad idea — they're fun for kids, too. Or you can try the simple fold below using square wrappers. Don't fret if your first efforts are sad and misshapen. You'll get the hang of it and, if you get friends or family in on it, you can laugh together until you do. If, however, you are overcome with frustration and the prospect of developing dumpling-related carpal tunnel is too much, don't panic. Just lay some wrappers in the pan to cover the bottom completely. Spoon and spread ½ inch of filling almost to the edges and cover it with another layer of wrappers. Fry up this quesadilla-looking thing the same as you would the dumplings, only use a plate to flip it. Once it's done, cut it into wedges and serve, refusing to answer any questions about how making dumplings went.

Gyoza

Makes 75 small dumplings.

75 packaged square dumpling skins
Vegetable oil for frying

For the filling:

1 ¼ pounds ground pork (not lean)
1 bunch scallions, chopped (reserve 1-2 tbs for garnish/sauce)
4 cloves garlic, minced
2 teaspoons salt
1 tablespoon soy sauce
2 cups finely chopped Napa cabbage (washed, salted and squeezed)
2 inches or 3 teaspoons fresh ginger, grated or finely minced
½ teaspoon sesame oil
1 tablespoon sake

For the dipping sauce:

3 tablespoons soy sauce
1 tablespoon vinegar
1 teaspoon sesame oil

A few drops of hot chili oil (optional)
Reserved chopped scallions

Combine filling ingredients in a bowl with your hands. Don't over-mix. Let the mixture rest refrigerated for 20 minutes.

Scoop ½ tablespoon of filling into the center of the dumpling skin. Dip a finger in your water bowl and wet the edge of the wrapper on one side. Fold the skin in half, forming a triangle and pinching the top sealed. Holding the belly of the dumpling, use your thumb and forefinger to push the outer corner up and form a pleat on each side. Pinch it in place and do the same on the opposite corner, sealing the dumpling completely.

In a nonstick pan, warm a quarter-sized drop of vegetable oil over medium heat. Arrange a single layer of dumplings in the pan and let them brown 3-5 minutes. Pour in 1/8 cup water and cover the pan for 4-5 minutes until they're steamed and the skins are translucent. Remove the cover to let the water evaporate and add another teaspoon of oil to the pan, frying until the bottoms of the dumplings get crispy brown again. Flip them if you like crust on both sides. Serve with small dishes of dipping sauce, and gorge.

Humboldt Collects at the Morris Graves

artbeat@northcoastjournal.com

Asher and Ellis Russo's collection of poultry wishbones looks like a series of spider-fine, upside-down capital Ys, hung neatly in order from small to large on parallel wires. It is one of the most visually arresting groupings at this month's small and engaging exhibition of collections made by Humboldt County residents at the Morris Graves Museum of Art. The tiny bones come with an origin story to match. The Russos write, "We inherited this collection of chicken and turkey wishbones from our grandmother (a vegetarian) who inherited them from her mother. Granny saved each and every one of them and hung them on a string above her kitchen sink." This sentence captures some sense of the meditative, deep-seated preoccupation that sustains a lot of long-term collecting. Better yet, it hints at the complex motivations that may lie behind such projects' genesis.

The collections in Humboldt Collects, curated by Jemima Harr and Matthew Oliveri, are like and unlike one another, in interesting ways. Whether the subject at hand is Jack Nash's collection of Swatch watches or Joe Renner's collection of toy John Deere tractors, certain structuring principles remain constant: objects that fall into a category are brought into one another's presence, and variations on a theme become apparent.

For instance, it came as a pleasant surprise to see that G. Barrett Mace's collection of cribbage boards encompasses pocket-sized specimens as well as sprawling tabletop models. It turns out that cribbage boards may be shaped like fish, planks, burls and wheels. Cribbage boards may be metal-faced or they may be made of blood-red lacquer and bear the likeness of an Arabian steed on a heart-shaped field.

In the same way, antique glass insulators made for telegraph, telephone and electric lines adhere to certain specs. They are made from thick, murky glass, like coke-bottle lenses, and for whatever serendipitous reason, they skew blue, with hues ranging aquamarine to nearly clear. These limiting conditions create a strong impression of relative homogeneity. Yet, at the same time, there's great diversity within these parameters and no two of the insulators Rod Robinson has collected here look wholly identical.

Wall text indicates collectors' motivations for assembly. Lisa and Rick Paul wrote about their collection of advertising signs from the last century: "Our collection tells a story of American life and products that have come and gone." Denise Henderson states that she loves "the old-fashioned names and beautiful designs" of antique calling cards and that she was motivated "most of all by curiosity about what sort of people they were and where all their relatives are today."

As a group, these collections demonstrate the bagginess of language. Words are imprecisely tethered to the things they designate. They drape more or less loosely across the surface of the real. Often the fit is more like that of sweats than yoga pants, but no two groupings are the same. Some of the objects in these collections are more alike than others. The Russo's wishbones are more uniform than the motley figurines in Bob Doran's exuberantly diverse collection of action figures. While the wishbones come in different shades and sizes, their visual impact is predicated on the repetition of near-identical forms. Doran's assemblage is a Whitman's Sampler of heroes, villains and heels, by way of contrast — expressions of the American id one and all, running the gamut from Batman to Superman to the Incredible Hulk to a model depicting the eponymous mascot of Burbank-based fast food chain Bob's Big Boy.

Heather Walker's collection of carrot-themed items and Sue Leskiw's collection of "objects relating to chipmunks" showcase the loosest fit of all between keywords and the objects that they designate. The "carrots" and "chipmunks" in these collections exist at a next-level remove from what is real. A collection of, say, antique glass insulators really does contain glass insulators, whereas a collection of carrot-themed objects does not contain actual carrots. It does, however, contain multitudes: paintings of carrots, statuettes of carrots, carrot-shaped utensils, carrot-shaped magnets, stuffed carrots, and examples of dollhouse furniture decorated with molded representations of carrots, for starters.

If you spend enough time with these collections, be forewarned: They might induce a flashback to Intro Philosophy, specifically the part that dealt with Plato's doctrine of forms — his theory that concepts embody the most accurate and truthful reality, and that objects partially represent a transcendent essence that can only be truly embodied by as an idea. Pillboxes and cribbage boards can be grouped and labeled and, potentially, searched because we have keyword terms with which to label them. Different as they are from one another, objects in these collections belong together because each of them reflects some aspect of the form "pillbox" or "cribbage board." We slot the objects we encounter into categories shaped by words. Even if you aren't on board with Plato's idealism, his idea of forms makes it easier to perceive what seems to be a baseline feature of the human condition: the imperfect fit between words and the things they describe.

Since the dawn of the 21st century, art has changed. The keyword logic that sustains collection-making now applies to information itself. The reservoir of extant imagery is bottomless, while new images are being generated daily at a rate that far exceeds human capacities. Contemporary art has become primarily a matter of managing rather than creating content; social media has made us into self-aware archivists. We're all collectors and curators now. That means this exhibition, of and about the local community, also manages to be genuinely of the contemporary moment. ●

Opera to Opry

HLOC's Phantom of the Country Opera

By David Jervis

frontrow@northcoastjournal.com

Phantom of the Opera traces its lineage back to a 1910 novel of the same name by French author Gaston Leroux. For many people, the point of creation for the story is either the classic 1925 silent film starring Lon Cheney or the 1943 talkie with Claude Rains. But let's face it, the best-known incarnation of the century-old tale of opera singer Christine and masked, disfigured Erik haunting the bowels of a Paris opera house is Andrew Lloyd Webber's 1980s West End/Broadway musical, which, once he unleashed it upon an unwitting world, never seems to have gone away (sort of Webber's stock in trade). Adaptations, re-imaginings and parodies of Leroux's tale have spawned and grown like creeping kudzu through the years, but just as an oft-recorded and covered piece of music takes on an enduring life of its own, it's hard for people to resist putting their own imprimatur on Phantom.

Enter Phantom of the Country Opera, the Humboldt Light Opera Company's annual summer production at Humboldt State University's Van Duzer Theatre, directed by HLOC artistic producing director and theater stalwart Carol McWhorter. A 1995 musical with a book by Sean Grennan and Kathy Santen, and music by Michael Duff, it relocates the story from Paris to Nashville, with a brief stop in Milan first. It is there, on the stage at La Scala, that we meet Chrissy (Rachel Post), in an elaborately staged, impressive opening number. An adept soprano, Christine has captured the heart of devoted suitor and co-star Antonio (Craig Waldvogel) but chooses to return to America when she hears of the death of her mother, a noted country and western performer.

Back in the Music City, Christine is Chrissy Jo Jenkins, and she finds herself as a backup singer at the Opry-esque Country Palace to the Queen of Country Music, Miss Sally Barker. She meets Skipper (Ty Vizenor), Sally's earnest young son, and finds that Sally is a scheming prima donna, who, along with her husband, Major Barker (Bill Ryder), is not above stealing credit for an old song written by Chrissy's mother. Chrissy also has the pining heart of Antonio with which to reckon, along with her rise to stardom and her developing friendships both with Skipper and Aaron (Carl McGahan), the venue's low-key but all-knowing maintenance man. And, of course, something is afoot around the Palace, which becomes clear with Miss Sally's skullduggery in motion: Lights crash down from the ceiling, voices come from nowhere and off we go. Phantom is great fun overall, as the puns fly along with sly jokes back to the original story, some hilarious down-home lines ("When I met you, you were sellin' wigs by the pound") and comic numbers ("Hog Butcher's Daughter," "Does Your Daddy Know You Kiss Cow-boys?"), as well the fabulously silly "Spaghetti Western" in the second act.

But the straws that stir the drink, as it were, are Post in the lead and McGahan as Aaron. Post is dynamic in her role, and if her acting chops are a bit unpolished, that fact is dwarfed by her amazing voice throughout the production, especially in the showstopper "If I Could Hold You." McGahan possesses a great voice as well, both speaking and singing, that sounds like Johnny Cash's basement-deep baritone. Phantom is not without its hiccups, such as the character of Skipper seeming to vanish from the story and stage for a roughly 40-minute stretch of the first act. A few clunky characters and subplots are cringe-worthy, too, even if the actors are able to punch out enough comic zeal and physicality to bring them to life in Van Duzer's vast and acoustically rich space. And a major plot point is telegraphed so early on that it would be worth griping about, were the show not based on a 116-year-old work with plot points so well-known they've become pop culture tropes. So gripe about that I shall not.

HLOC's summer productions, which in recent years have included Mary Poppins and Thoroughly Modern Millie, have set the standard high for production values, and Phantom does not fall short at all in that regard. The live orchestra conducted by Holly MacDonell does an excellent job, and the country costume styling of the enormous cast by Katri Pitts and Laura Welch is impressive indeed. Phantom is winningly engaging all in all, enough so that I never thought to wonder until later if, in fact, the Van Duzer has some sort of phantom of its own dwelling away in its far reaches. I spent a lot of time in the Theatre Arts Building when I attended HSU, and it frankly wouldn't surprise me. So I guess that's the next take on Leroux's original story. Someone out there get on that.

Phantom of the Country Opera plays Fridays and Saturdays through Aug. 13 at 7:30 p.m., with Sunday matinees at 2 p.m. on Aug. 7 and 14 at HSU's Van Duzer Theatre. Visit www.hloc.org.

Will You do the Fandango?

By Andy Powell

thesetlist@northcoastjournal.com

We all have daily struggles in our modern lives, trying to scrape by and hustle a living out of the crushing jaws of the free market. Money issues aside, it's easy to overlook the small things in life that we find meaningful and create joy. Stop and smell the roses, it has been said. The thinking is that if you can hit the metaphorical pause button for just a few moments while rushing through the day and smell a rose, you will be reminded of the immediate and beautifully overwhelming "nowness" of the present. As amazing as roses are, they are not the exclusive revealers of the now. Almost anything can connect us with whatever it is exactly I'm speaking of (dasein anyone?) and, for many of us, music can be the most accessible.

I was lucky enough to be at a dear friend's wedding recently and, as we know, putting on a wedding can be stressful. My friends did a remarkable job and everything turned out great but the bride and groom were, well, exhausted during the reception. Friends and family who had been helping set up were almost as tired. Late in the evening during the dancing, the bride requested Queen's magnum opus, "Bohemian Rhapsody" be played on the P.A. system. The DJ, obliged and the room transformed. A sort of private flash mob event immediately came to life. A room full of perhaps 60 people all joined their voices together with Freddie's and danced and jumped about as if their lives depended on it for close to six minutes. Children as young as 7 and adults as old as ... well, old, were all singing wildly in joyous unison. I had never seen anything like it. The groom, a rather shy — and by this point in the evening, rag-doll-looking fellow — was fully animated and jumping around on the dancefloor as if he had gotten more than four hours sleep the nights before and had been practicing this song his whole life. The whole room was electric and strangers were smiling and thicker than thieves during this one song. I will admit to almost tearing up during all this. Call me a sappy sucker but I'll call it magical. Everyone was completely alive and being right there, right then. There are only so many noses you can shove into roses, but play a great song and everyone can sing along.

Thursday

The 32nd annual Reggae on the River kicks off today at French's Camp down there close to the Humboldt/Mendocino county line. Ever a favorite festival of ours here in Humboldt, let's hope you got your tickets ahead of time. Congrats to the Mateel for making this year's festival "water neutral" with a killer rain-water catchment pond. You can peruse all the performers and, I hear, can stream it online at www.reggaeontheriver.com. About as far away from reggae as you can get, Portland rockers Blitzen Trapper are returning to Humboldt Brews tonight. I thought they were just in town three or four months ago, but it turns out it was back in November when they stopped by Arcata (on their way to Seattle) supporting their then-new release of All Across This Land. I won't review the album again but you're welcome to go back to the Nov. 12, 2015, edition of The Setlist, should you want to hear what songwriter Eric Earley told me about writing and recording said album right after it came out. Anyway, these guys are a hardworking rock band and I kick myself for missing them last time they were in town, so I'll be making this one for sure. Local lunar dirge band Strix Vega will be opening this $15 show at 9 p.m. (Full disclosure: I'm not only going there to see BT, I'm playing.) Those of you that have been around the local indie music scene for the past two decades will most likely remember the name of former local Michelle Cable of Panache who moved out New York City way to keep booking bands on tour throughout the country. Well, she's sending a few more bands back through Humboldt and you can thank her for getting Toronto-based songwriter Michael Rault to The Miniplex tonight where he'll be peddling his "synthesis of jukebox R'n'B, and acid psych." He's joined by Austin, Texas indie psych-poppers Tele Novella and local favorites The Monster Women, all for only $5. This show gets going around 9 p.m.

Friday

It's Trinidad Arts Night tonight, so starting at 6 p.m. you can stroll around this drinking village with a fishing problem (as I've long heard it called) and soak up the scene. At the same time Ultra Secret (part of the Good Guy Organization?) will be fusion-funkin' for free at the Mad River Brewery Tasting Room in Blue Lake.

Blitzen Trapper plays Humboldt Brewery on Thursday, Aug. 4 at 9 p.m. Submitted

Saturday

Speaking of Blue Lake, 11 a.m. is the start time for the annual Buddy Brown Blues Festival happening in Perigot Park all day. There's a great lineup (too many to list here) so bring $12 and soak up the sun in the lake o' blue. The Miniplex in Arcata hosts Miss Lana Rebel who has been stopping by Humboldt for at least 11 years from what I know, and I have hazy memories of seeing a previous band of hers called The Juanita Family and Friends at some house shows way back when. I think she lived in Oregon back then, but relocated to Tucson some time ago. This queen of dustbowl country is joined by friend and collaborator Kevin Michael Mayfield and also former Oregonian Sir Rozzell — who I'm assuming is the Gabe Rozzell who moved to Humboldt years back — at 9 p.m. These three musicians for only $5, so go check 'em out. Local keyboard wizard Aber Miller tells me that Scuber Mountain has a special show at Hum Brews in Arcata tonight. Bassist Drew, who has played with too many local bands to name, has only the rest of this month in Humboldt before moving up north to Seattle and drummer John is moving south. The band isn't dissolving or disbanding, just decentralizing from what Aber tells me. But this may be your last time to check out the Scubers this year, so don't miss it. They'll take the stage around 9:30 p.m. and, again, for only a $5 cover. I'm still trying to find a time to sit down with local legend Ian of the Alibi to pick his brain about the local music scene, but while we work out our schedules he informs me a rock 'n' roll band from Australia called Miss Destiny is hitting the 'bi tonight. Expect the soundwaves to burst forth starting around 11 p.m. when Colorado Country Punks The Drunken Cuddle takes the floor. Another $5 show tonight.

Wednesday

We've got some out-of-towners tonight in our fair neck of the woods. Visiting us from Kentucky, singer/songwriter Jeremy Pinnell is on the road supporting his recent album entitled OH/KY, which is getting some pretty good reviews. I also read somewhere that he's actually from Cincinnati, OH and with his album named what it is I'll just assume he's from both places. Regardless, you'll find him tonight for free at 8 p.m. at Six Rivers Brewery in McKinleyville. From what I can find online, it appears that Peter Bradley Adams is originally from Birmingham, Alabama. I don't know where he considers himself from currently, but I can't think of a reason why that really matters to us tonight. He's had his songs land on some TV shows that even I have heard of, and if you couple that with the fact that his press release states his former band was signed to a record label by Robbie Robertson, Peter must have it going on. He'll be performing for $15 at Hum Brews tonight starting at 9 p.m. ●

Full show listings in the Journal's Music and More grid, the Calendar and online. Bands and promoters, send your gig info, preferably with a high-res photo or two, to music@northcoastjournal.com.

Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs

The Fairest One of All

The Arkley Center for the Performing Arts is a gorgeous venue restored to its stately 1920s architectural glory. With sweeping rows of red velvet seats, dramatic theater drapes and ornate walls rising to a high ceiling with chandeliers, it is the perfect setting to enjoy ballet, theater, music and, now, movies.

As part of the Arkley Center's classic family films series happening the first Saturday of the month through November, catch Walt Disney's Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs (1937), Saturday, Aug. 6 at 3 p.m. ($5). The colorful adaptation of the Grimm Brothers' fairy tale was Disney's first full-length animated film and features some of the most recognizable and loved characters in popular culture. In a time of cookie-cutter everything, we're lucky to have a few restored theaters that offer a unique and evocative movie experience where hundreds of people can share the movie magic together.

Gather your friends and family for these upcoming favorites: Superman (1978) on Sept. 3, Little Shop of Horrors (1986) on Oct. 1 and Raiders of the Lost Ark (1981) on Nov. 5. All films are $5 (buy tickets for the whole series and get free popcorn) and play at 3 p.m. with time to enjoy Arts Alive! after. Not a bad way to spend a Saturday.

In Like Flynn

Summer is a grand time when fairs and fishing occupy lazy vacation days, and, if we're lucky, a bit of nostalgia works its way into our repertoire. Something like, say, an old-timey circus? Where ringleaders sport handlebar mustaches, striped pants and suspenders, and tip their top hats to acrobats soaring high. Where cotton candy is a perfectly viable dinner. Where the kid in all of us comes out to play. Yep, that's the ticket. Step right up and get yours when Mendocino's thrilling Flynn Creek Circus comes to Newburg Park Aug. 11-14 ($30 adult, $22 senior, $15 child).

Billed as a human-only circus (which means you can bet your Barnum there are no animal acts), top performers from all over the world gather under a traditional big top tent to juggle, throw knives and perform daring acrobatics and aerial stunts to delight and amaze the entire family. See the sparkle and spectacle before they pack it all up and roll out of town.

Performance are Thursday, Aug. 11 at 7 p.m., Friday, Aug. 12 at 7 p.m., Saturday, Aug. 13 at 4 and 7 p.m. and Aug. 14 at 1 and 4 p.m. Advance discount tickets are available online at www.flynncreekcircus.com. Door ticket sales begin one hour prior to each show. And for those of you who like your jaw to totally hit the ground, VIP front row seating is available for $50.

Alfred Hitchcock

Hitched

Come in from the August heat for some thrills and chills during the Eureka Theater's Summer of Suspense featuring weekly splashes of ice-cold Alfred Hitchcock movies ($5). You can scratch your itch for Hitch every Friday night at 7:30 p.m. this month with plot twists, tracking shots, poised blondes and a game of Where's Alfred as you scan the screen for his requisite cameos.

We've all got that one charming/shady uncle. On Aug. 5 PMP Wine Club presents Shadow of a Doubt (1943), in which Teresa Wright stars as a young woman trying to figure out if her darling Uncle Charlie is whacking widows for their cash. Seen it? No spoilers in the lobby.

The Journal hosts the dizzying Vertigo (1958) on Aug. 12, with James Stewart as a gumshoe sidelined by fear of heights and obsessed with a dead woman and her doppelganger, played by the iconic Kim Novak.

Since we're greedy, we're sponsoring Rear Window (1954), too. On Aug. 20, come back for more James Stewart, this time as a photojournalist-turned-peeping-Tom who may have witnessed a murder through his zoom lens while laid up with a busted leg. Grace Kelly plays his socialite girlfriend and does the Neighborhood Watch legwork.

Wrap it up on the run with Cary Grant and Eva Marie Saint in the stylish North by Northwest (1959) presented by Carson Park Design on Aug. 26. Saint is the ultimate femme fatale, playing playboy Roger Thornhill (Grant), who's mistaken for a spy and swept up in the action.

It's going to be killer.

The Outsiders

Rogue agents, dads and moms

By John J. Bennett

filmland@northcoastjournal.com

You can always fall back on third-world bare-knuckle boxing.

Reviews

JASON BOURNE. Bourne (Matt Damon), who spent most of the 14 years since we met him (The Bourne Identity, 2002) trying to reconstruct his pre-CIA past, has by now given himself over to semi-therapeutic, non-lethal violence. On the Greek-Albanian border, he dominates bare-knuckle boxing matches in refugee camps. Then he holes up in squalid hotels and stares into the middle distance; not exactly a guy at peace with himself.

To loop back around: Bourne is an identity created by a top-secret CIA program wherein volunteers are subjected to a deeply immersive training program from which they emerge as finely tuned operators (read: assassins). There have been four previous movies addressing the subject. One of those starred not Damon but Jeremy Renner, so some might consider it non-canonical. Two previous installments, like the newest one, were directed by Paul Greengrass (United 93, Captain Phillips) and were the high points of the series. Greengrass might be the best action director working today, so even if Jason Bourne is one of his secondary works, which it is, it still laps the field in terms of intelligence and intensity.

While Bourne sullenly knocks out roughneck refugees in the Mediterranean, longtime ally Nicky Parsons (Julia Stiles) makes moves in Iceland. She hacks the CIA, stealing classified documents pertaining to the legacy of Black Ops programs of which Bourne is a product. Her incursion draws the attention of brilliant analyst/careerist/opportunist Heather Lee (Alicia Vikander).

She briefs Agency director Dewey (Tommy Lee Jones) on the situation. He deploys The Asset (Vincent Cassel), a mildly-villainous operator with a Bourne beef, and soon they're all running all over the place killing. In the midst of this, Bourne rediscovers his need to learn about his former life. I almost forgot, what with all the killing.

Greengrass' work has always been identifiable by its mixture of punishingly realistic violence and equally punishing emotional authenticity. In Jason Bourne, that balance is maintained, but barely, as the movie occasionally leans too hard on plot and sometimes questionable philosophizing. But it also includes some impossibly elaborate car chases, so points all around. PG13. 123M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

CAPTAIN FANTASTIC. When a given weekend could justifiably leave one with the impression that art is dead, at least at the movie house, there are yet glimmers of hope. Perhaps all the more exciting for their increasing scarcity, these little rough-hewn products of imagination have occasionally been appearing unexpectedly next to the comic books, pointless cartoons and horror cash-ins. This creates a pleasant feeling of being transported not just by the story, but by the type of movie. Captain Fantastic feels like a movie of the '90s, suggesting possibility and hope for art with its unassuming narrative.

It was written and directed by Matt Ross, whom most will recognize as a character actor, a veteran of the business who has lately distinguished himself playing villains on HBO series (Alby Grant on Big Love, Gavin Belson on Silicon Valley). Turns out Ross is also a solid storyteller with a bit of cinematic visionary in him.

Ben (Viggo Mortenson) and Leslie (Trin Miller), in the ultimate expression of their distaste for contemporary capitalism, have moved deep off-grid. They purchased property in the middle of the woods in Washington state, vowing to raise their six children as philosopher kings, true human beings unsullied by mass media and consumerism. To a certain extent, the plan works beautifully: Their boys and girls are remarkably fit, multilingual, discursive on a vast array of subjects and able to kill their own food. But Leslie is deeply troubled, the kids are perhaps better prepared for the collapse of modern society than for any foray into it and Ben will be forced to question the validity of his own methods.

The story of Captain Fantastic is simple but vividly and articulately imagined. Mishandled, it would cast the Family Cash as kooky, arch or weird. Instead, they live onscreen as real people in an extreme circumstance, still filled with love and sadness and wonder. When circumstances compel the family to take a long road-trip into the wilds of suburban America, their green and living utopia recedes in the distance and their collective idealism is measured against the world at large. A plot summary would fail to do justice to the movie, and much of the satisfaction I drew from it was in the discovery of little details, scenes and elements that illuminated and enlivened Ross' characters and their singular world. So I will instead recommend Captain Fantastic stridently and insist that it be seen. R. 118M. BROADWAY.

BAD MOMS represents a different sort of insight into family life, one without quite as much poetry and hot blood in it as the above. It made me laugh, though, despite the occasional question about its ostensible feminist point of view.

Amy (Mila Kunis), mother of two, spends her day rocketing from home to school to part-time job at a ridiculously hip coffee company, back to school for games or recitals and eventually back home to mother her third child, the idiotic delayed-adolescent who married and impregnated her. One night, she meets up with a couple of other moms who don't toe the PTA line. She gets loaded with ferocious man-eater Carla (Kathryn Hahn) and mousy oddball Kiki (Kristen Bell) and they eventually decide to go to war with the power-moms.

Hahn and Bell work well together to steal most of their scenes, and the ultimate theme of the movie is one of appreciation and self-respect. However, the notion that we should be surprised by the fact that attractive women in their 30s have inner lives and like to party strikes a sour note. R. 101M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF TRISHA ANN WARLICK CASE NO. PR160226
To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both,
TRISHA ANN WARLICK

A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by Petitioner, Randy B. DePute In the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt. The petition for probate requests that RANDY B. DePUTE be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent. THE PETITION requests the decedent's will and codicils, if any, be admitted to probate. The will and any codicils are available for examination in the file kept by court. THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority. A HEARING on the petition will be held on August 18, 2016 at 2:00 p.m. at the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt, 825 Fifth Street, Eureka, in Dept.: 8. IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney. IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law. YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court

If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale.
